

Jeffrey J. Crowley, MD

Bakersfield Dermatology & Skin Cancer Medical Group
Bakersfield, California
Assistant Clinical Professor
Department of Medicine
University of California, Los Angeles
Los Angeles, California

Jeffrey J. Crowley received a medical degree and completed a medical internship and dermatology residency (including service as Chief Resident) at Stanford University in California. Dr. Crowley is currently in private practice in Bakersfield, California, where he specializes in the treatment of psoriasis. He has served as faculty at both Stanford and the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA).

A Fellow of the American Academy of Dermatology and the American Society of Mohs Surgery, Dr. Crowley is a member of the medical board of the National Psoriasis Foundation and has been involved in drafting guidelines for the treatment of psoriasis.

Dr. Crowley has published over 30 peer-reviewed journal articles on such topics as the effect of tumor necrosis factor on neutrophil function, cutaneous T-cell lymphoma, and the treatment of psoriasis. His academic interests including teaching dermatology and family practice residents at both Stanford University (Clinical Instructor) and the University of California, Los Angeles (Clinical Assistant Professor). Dr. Crowley has been involved in phase 2, 3, and postmarketing studies with alefacept, etanercept, efalizumab, and adalimumab, and he has served as principal investigator in several funded trials.