

Ankur Parikh, DO, Medical Director Precision Medicine, Cancer Treatment Centers of America

Dr. Parikh completed an internal medicine residency at Riverside Methodist Hospital in Columbus, Ohio, followed by a hematology/oncology fellowship at the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland.

Currently, Dr. Ankur Parikh serves as the medical director of precision medicine at Cancer Treatment Centers of America, and hematologist-oncologist & medical oncologist at CTCA in Philadelphia. He has served as a principal and associate investigator for clinical research protocols involving myelodysplastic syndrome and aplastic anemia. He has also written book chapters on hematology topics and his work has been published in various peer-reviewed journals.